SUGGESTIONS

—TO—

TEACHERS OF HISTORY.

There is no "royal road" to a knowledge of history. To some it has a happy fascination, and they find its study a pleasant task,—though task it must be. To others it is a bugbear and a burden. The responsibility of this condition rests with two classes: first, with parents who have not, from the beginning, taken proper care to cultivate at home a love of good reading in the young mind; and second, with teachers who have not done so at school,—who have not turned the bright side of history toward their classes.

With the hope that they may be of the same practical benefit to the reader that they have been to the writer, the following brief suggestions are submitted:

1. Assign the lesson by the outline.

By this means you will teach history and not book. Have each pupil procure an outline if possible; if not, write the lesson on the blackboard, or have a copy on your desk for their use.

2. While you may have one adopted text-book, do not for any reason confine yourself or the class to its exclusive use. Bring all the books on the subject that you can procure, and invite the pupils to bring in the histories that may be found in the neighborhood.

3. Discard the text-book during the recitation. Do not permit the pupils to use theirs, do not use your own. Inspire them with confidence in your ability by showing yourself to be able. How can the pupils hope to learn history, if they have abundant evidence that the teacher has not mastered it? They will feel a due sense of injustice if not permitted to peep into their books when the teacher constantly refers to his.

4. By all means prevent the pupils committing the text. Comparatively little good can come of such a process of study. The facts are what are wanted and not the words of any author.

5. Each pupil should stand while reciting, and tell plainly in his own language all he knows of the topic under discussion. Seldom use questions, never questions suggesting answers, or questions requiring monosyllabic answers.

6. Use maps freely. Be sure that all the pupils know the location of every place or route mentioned. Have the maps often reproduced on the blackboard from memory. Also, have portions of the outline written upon the blackboard without reference.

7. Review often. Teach the pupils that what is learned to-day is not to be forgotten to-morrow.

8. Never miss an opportunity to direct your pupils into a literary channel. Refer them to all the historical poems with which you may be familiar; also the best biographies, sketches, etc. In short, strive to make their study of history auxiliary to noble characters and useful lives.
